"DRY UP"

A Two Reel Century Comedy

With

Jack Singleton and Bartine Burkett

* * *

Jack is a correspondence school attorney, not yet licensed. His landlady swipes his clothes because his rent is only six months overdue. Jack drops a lariat and catches a passerby. He pulls him up to his ledge and then strips him until he fully clothes himself.

It being breakfast time, he hurls an old shoe at the milkman. The latter is quite indignant and throws a bottle of milk at him, which is caught. A loaf of bread is also obtained in the same fashion, but the landlady enters and spoils his party.

Jack goes out into the world and almost acts as attorney for a man who has some plaster poured on his suit, but the tough foreman makes one pass at him and Jack disappears. More business almost appears, until he sees a man injured by an automobile. When he sees the fair owner leave the car, he bawls his prospective client out, and chases him away.

The lady gives him a summons to serve on her husband. The husband proves to be the tough building foreman. Jack beats it, until he runs into a cop, then hands the paper over to the irascible husband..But the husband makes up with his wife, leaving Jack flat.
